

I was just made aware today of three Clear Channel Communications radio stations that were engaged in inciting violence against bicycle riders. As a bike rider having experience riding in many different areas, I can tell you that these type of people are everywhere. To actually encourage listeners to seek out bike riders to inflict harm upon is completely and absolutely unacceptable. If a listener actually acted upon this outrageous incitement, then the DJ, the radio station, and the corporate parent Clear Channel should be held completely responsible as well as the person actually committing the act. I believe that the DJ's in question should be severely reprimanded, ordered to provide community service to bicycle related events, promote bicycle safety and co-existence with motorists on the highways, and they should be heavily fined by the FCC for this outrageous behavior. Clear Channel and the stations involved should be heavily fined by the FCC and be required to promote bicycle safety and co-existence with motorists on the highway.
